Classic Allusion Graces Reference to Mrs. Lydig, Whom Church Will Not Let Him Marry—Verses Tell of Fifth Avenue Scenes.

"To Rita H. de Alba de Acosta, an ambitious and stimulating intelligence, gifted with a knowledge of the beautiful, a Tanagra figure come to life, a captivating companion."

This is the phrasing in which the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, rector of the Church of the Ascension, dedicates to his fiancée, Mrs. Philip Lydig, his little volume of poems just published by Harper & Bros. The title of the book is "A Fifth Avenue Parade and Other Poems."

Dr. Grant will set folks to guessing as to what he means when he refers to Mrs. Lydig as a Tanagra figure. Tanagras were small terra cotta figures used by the ancient Greeks as ornaments or household gods, buried in tombs or enshrined in temples.

The Tanagra simile of Dr. Grant's dedication refers apparently to a deity of the household and the temple. For the Tanagras usually described under that name were miniatures of the domestic deities and have been found in greatest numbers in the ruins of Tanagra, in Boeotia, where they graced the houses and the temples of its priests before the Christian era. For beauty and charm the palm has by general consent been given to the Tanagra figures in the early centuries.

The book takes its name from the opening poem, which tells of the character of one meets in the big city. Among them are "A Stranger on the Sidewalk," "Policeman," "A Woman on the Sidewalk to the Stranger," and a poem which tells of the funeral of the victims of a factory fire, which is clothed in pathetic cadences.

The book is generously sprinkled with verses which have to do with the romantic side of life, notably "The Wakeful Bride" and "The Lover." The first stanza of the former reads:

The old owl lay in his restless bed,
His fair bride by his side,
The young pages gazed from the outer tower.

And all their eyes were wide.

This poem goes on to give a study in contrast between the aged owl, who has obviously been wished on the young bride as a husband, and the page boy, whom she really desires and to set forth the feelings of the page boy and the aged bridegroom. It concludes as follows:

Oh! A summer night is a dream as a ghost,
To souls that have missed their desire;
For it tells of death, but it wakes to life
The smoldering heart's pent fire.

Breakfast with sweet muffins made while the coffee cooks

PIPING hot sweet muffins—right out of the oven!
Smell fragrant! Taste delicious! Just the thing to serve with the morning coffee.

Now that you have the new cake flour you can make them in two minutes—while the water in the percolator boils.

How it became possible

The scientists at the big Gambrill Mill, in the heart of the Maryland farmland, have been working for four years to perfect a cake flour that would take the effort out of cake making. They achieved it in Pat-A-Cake.

Eggs, shortening and milk are combined with all the other ingredients necessary for the perfect cake.
They are reduced to powder form. It is all in the Pat-A-Cake. You only add a cup of water, beat it up and bake.

Beside delicious muffins, Pat-A-Cake makes a dozen desserts; cottage puddings, all kinds of cake, cookies and doughnuts.

Try it yourself today. You'll agree

Given 100% by experts

A discovery as startling as this attracted the attention of experts. Good Housekeeping Institute, Modern Practical Proving Plant, the New York Tribune Institute, all used and tested
it. Each gave it a certificate of merit as 100% in purity, flavor, economy and labor saving.

This information, vouchsafed today by Miss Baker's father, Alfred L. ## Nothing can be too good for him

HIS WIFE lives in the best home or apartment he can afford. He insists on the best seats when he takes her to a show. He has the best equipped office, with the most competent personnel he can find.

That's because he knows the truth of the old adage—that the best is always the cheapest, not merely because the best endures, but because it satisfies.

Now the most valuable thing which any high-strung, hard-working man possesses is his nerve force. Whatever depletes it by unnecessary dissatisfaction harms him far more than a money loss.

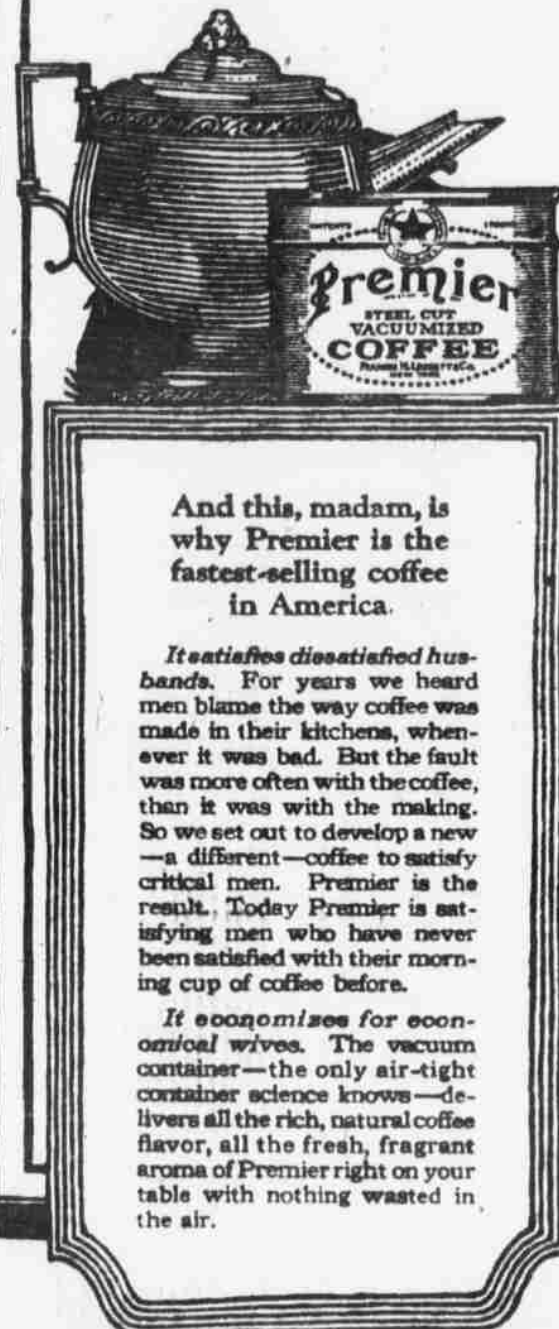

Every intelligent woman soon grasps this truth, and does her part.

But women who would have nothing but the choicest cuts of meats, the freshest vegetables and the purest dairy products on their tables, sometimes forget, and compromise on the very thing particularly important from a man's point of view—the coffee.

Most men want a real man's coffee. A coffee with a blend that is smooth, rich and aromatic. A coffee that is neither roasted too much, nor too little. And they want all of its strength, all of its natural freshness unimpaired.

To the making of that kind of coffee is what we have devoted all the resources, skill and facilities at our command.

And we are sure, madam, that Premier is not too good for any good husband.

And this, madam, is why Premier is the fastest-selling coffee in America.

It satisfies dissatisfied husbands. For years we heard men blame the way coffee was made in their kitchens, whenever it was bad. But the fault was more often with the coffee, than it was with the making. So we set out to develop a new—a different—coffee to satisfy critical men. Premier is the result. Today Premier is satisfying men who have never been satisfied with their morning cup of coffee before.

It economizes for economical wives. The vacuum container—the only air-tight container science knows—delivers all the rich, natural coffee flavor, all the fresh, fragrant aroma of Premier right on your table with nothing wasted in the air.
